REGULAR SESSION CITY COUNCIL

HEAR REPORTS—AUTHORIZE LOAN OF $3,000—CROWING ROOSTER SUBJECT OF DISCUSSION.

The common council met Tuesday night in regular session.

The council had a length discussion upon signs. First they gave the Nash Motor Sales company permission to put up a sign. Next Peter Pappas asked permission to put up a sign on Michigan avenue. Three voted in favor of allowing him to do so and four opposed it. Then the council voted to reconsider the Nash permission and finally voted to lay the whole matter on the table for two weeks.

Permission was granted Howard Chapin to make repairs on his garage on Adams street.

A. J. Nulan appeared before the council and asked permission to mage some changes in his building on Washington street. The council had voted to permit him to erect a brick building, and the architects advised that some minor changes should be made in the rear and that steel laths and cement should be used. It was voted to allow him to make the change.

Justice Stadtmiller reported that he had paid to the city treasurer the sum of $59.95 for fines, costs and fees collected by him in December.

Poor Commisisoner Connors reported that he had spent $84.50 in the first and fourth wards for the poor in buying groceries and coal.

A report of the special assessors relative to the Hatch property was voted to be received and adopted.

Aldermen Moorman and Horner of the building committee reported that bonds had been filed and approved for the Kitchell Construction company and the DeLaval Turbine company, which firms are doing work for the city.

Alderman Horner, who had been appointed on a committee relative to the extension of the fire limits in the city, recommended that the present ordinance was adequate if enforced.

The ways and means committee reported and recommended the adoption of the special assessments on Wallace boulevard and Sherman street. It was voted to adopt and confirm the report.

Objections were filed by A. T. Baker to the proposed sanitary sewer on Brower street. It was voted to lay the entire matter on the table until April 1.

The ways and means committee in a resolution recommended that the mayor and city clerk be authorized to arrange for a loan of $3.000 for the Gas copany.

Just before adjournment Alderman Charles Holmes stated that Miss Ethyl Howe had asked him to bring before the council the matter of a crowing rooster that annoyed her. One alderman suggested that they buy the rooster and have a feast; another one suggested that they wait until the next election and have him for a midnight lunch, a third alderman stated that he would give a dollar for him. Alderman Moorman made a motion that the rooster be referred to the senior alderman of the third ward, which was Alderman Holmes.

It was then voted to adjourn. After adjournment City Caretaker Willis Dolph stated that he knew what would make the rooster quit crowing. "Put him on a roost small enough so that he cannot stretch his neck or raise his head and he will not crow," said Dolph.

ATTORNEY CARL LEHMAN MEETS WITH ACCIDENT

At the Lehman home in Ann Arbor New Year's eve Carl H. Lehman, of the law firm of Lehman & Lisle, was accidentally shot in the thigh by his 14-year-old son. The family had sat up to watch the old year out and the new year in. As the hour approached young Lehman went outside with the shotgun as a part of the program for the event. Mr. Lehman had loaded the gun for his son and he and the mother stood inside watching. Twice the boy fired and the family watched with considerable merriment at each recoil of the gun and the plucky way the boy handled himself. Hearing their laughter the lad turned laughing and in some manner the gun was again discharged, the shot entering Mr. Lehman's thigh, inflicting an ugly wound.

A physician was immediately called and gave out that unless something unforseen set in Mr. Lehman stood a good chance of recovery, but that it would be some time before he would have the use of his leg. Tuesday it was reported that Mr. Lehman was suffering a good deal and it might be possible that he would have to lose his leg.

It is an unfortunate affair, and "Pet," as he is known by his friends, has the sympathy of all in Washtenaw county.

NIGHT CLERK PUTS UP FIGHT WITH ROBBER

Jack Lindverts, night clerk at the Hawkins house, was attacked in the hotel office at 5 o'clock Thursday morning by a guest who had registered Wednesday night under the name of J. Benton, of Chicago.

The clerk was asleep in the office on a davenport when the thug came down and hit him on the back of the head with a stone as large as a big's man's fist. Thinking he had put Lindverts out, the robber then attempted to rob the cash register, which failed to open, as the current was off. Lindverts, regaining his consciousness, got up and fought with the man to the street, where he escaped. Lindverts was weakened by the loss of blood, but he fought his man gamely and succeeded in getting E. P. Phillps wakened by making an outcry for help. The thug finally pulled himself out of his overcoat and ran down Michigan avenue and disappeared.

The police were notified and Chief Connors was soon on the job. The state police and surrounding cities were notified. Up to Thursday noon the robber had not been caught.

"MOLLY O" A BIG CARD AT MARTHA WASHINGTON

It was Mack Sennett who flashed the wit, wisdom, beauty and brilliance of "Mickey" to the world.

It was Mack Sennett who has produced another triumph—one that will out-rival "Mickey," and its title is "Molly O."

In "Molly O" are again combined the forces that made "Mickey" supreme among comedies: Mack Sennett, the producer; merry Mabel Normand, the mischievous star; and F. Richard Jones, the director.

Miss Normand touches the peaks of art and the heights of comedy in her portrayal of a daughter of poverty struggling against the overwhelming odds of environment to reach the uplands of happiness.

Taking more than a year to complete and over 2,000 persons to present, "Molly O" comes to the Martha Washington theatre next week in the complete confidence of the management that it is greater than "Mickey," and one of the very few really big productions that have distinguished the Silver Sheet.

It is a picture of a love story as sweet and pure as anything that has ever been written.

It is an emotional dramatic offering that in some scenes transcends the best that has ever been put on the screen.

And it is a melodrama in which the villains are confounded, in which the hero licks a villain barehanded, and which concludes with a thrilling aeroplane chase after a fleeing blimp.

KIWANIS CLUB HEARS E. S. RAYMOND

E. S. Raymond, of Detroit, spoke Wednesday at the meeting of the Kiwanis club, taking for his subject "Insurance." He told of the various forms of insurance, including compensation and automobile insurance. He stated that too many policies have so many exclusions in their contracts that they do not cover the loss in the average automobile accident. There are only two legitimate exclusions, he stated. These, he said, are, first, children driving under 18 years of age; and, second, racing. He stated that the Michigan legislature had done a wrong thing in giving children under 16 years of age the privilege of driving an automobile. He wished that something could be done to remedy this law in Michigan.

Secretary Ray Cotton read the names of the various committees for the coming year. Prof. Carl Pray reported that 175 children were served at the Christmas dinner given by the Kiwanis and Rotary clubs.

PROF. M. S. PITTMAN TALKS TO THE LADIES

Speaking Wednesday before the different women's clubs of the city, who were the guests of the Ypsilanti Woman's club in their open meeting, Prof. M. S. Pittman said:

"I am glad to know the ladies play such an important part in this city's business. There are great changes in the attitude of the public. A few years ago people said let me get away from the country, and now it is let me get into the country. A mother who reared a large family and only one of them a farmer said, 'Poor Mike, he could not do anything, so he is on the farm.' It is different nowadays. Farmers need knowledge that is broad and deep and practical. The farmers are the nation's foremost men. If the son cannot be a farmer then he can go to the factory to do some little thing for hours and hours over again—a job that needs little brains. This is the great change in the attitude of the farmer, and he is a great man today. There are pages and pages in our history books about war, but little space devoted to other periods. During the Civil war the northerners thought how could a rebel get to heaven, and the rebels thought the Yankees were damned. Aftr a long study of the Revolutionary war a child has a hatred for England. I hope now that the children are not taught to hate Germany. We must be too busy to waste time in hatred. Every rebel now rejoices over the freedom of the slaves and the union, and rgrets the suffering made by the war. We are all aiming now to make war unnecessary and, if possible, impossible; and I am proud that the women are standing back of our nation's high ideals. There is a changed attitude towards life itself. Ministers used to warn us in all their sermons of how near we go to death. Now they advise us to live now that we can live forever. There are ladies here today near three score and ten years wearing short skirts. Folks used to hunt in the almanacs to find medicines to relieve their pains, but now they jump in a Ford and take a ride in the country for fresh air. When I was a boy so much time was devoted to denominationism that the big things in Christianty were overlooked. I never saw a Catholic until I was 22, and then I found they were just like the rest of us. My best friend is a Jew. Many of my good friends are Catholics and Mormons. We are all human and we cannot afford wasting soul power talking about little denominational differences. My early school days' lickin' and learnin' went together. I cried because I had to go to school, while now the mother cries when the little one starts. The attitude is different."

YPSILANTI LAUNDRY CHANGES HANDS

Guy C. Miller and Guy V. Clark have taken over the Ypsilanti laundry. The young men are both well known in Ypsilanti. Mr. Miller has been with the laundry for the past five years in charge of the outside work. Mr. Clark has been in charge of the inside work at the laundry since the death of Roy McCullough and having an experience in laundries for the past 15 years.

The new firm has the best wishes of their many friends. Both are experts in the laundry business and no doubt will give Ypsilanti the best of service.

BECKER HOME BURNS THIS MORNING AT 6

The home of Chris Becker was totally destroyed Thursday morning at 6 o'clock by fire which caught from the roof. The place is outside of the city limits on North Prospect street, beyond fire protection. The fire department was out with chemicals but the fire had gained too much headway.

Mr. Becker was in Detroit at work. Mrs. Becker, it was stated, had to be held to prevent her going in the flames and trying to get $70 in money that was in the house. The Prospect school was dismissed early Thursday forenoon in order that pupils might go home and get clothing and shoes for the seven Becker children, part of whom attend the Prospect school.

The loss is estimated at $3,000.

THE ECK FAMILY LEAVES THE CITY

The Eck family, arrested several days ago for alleged bootlegging, has left the city. At the time of the arrest Mrs. Eck was given her freedom with the understanding that she was to leave the city and county within four days. Some say that she took her time and exceeded the four-day limit.

Joseph Eck, the husband, was taken to Ann Arbor to stand trial of the charge sworn against him. He was also released and given time to seek other fields. We understand they have gone to Detroit.

There is considerable comment on the court's action in this case and not a few are criticizing it. There is in Ypsilanti, as well as in all cities and towns, considerable bootlegging going on, but we believe that the officers are doing all in their power to stop it. It is one thing to say that certain parties are bootlegging and another thing to prove it. In the Eck case it seems they had the proof and just why he was let off so easy we are unable to say. However, we do not believe bootlegging is being carried on in Ypsilanti to the extent that some would have us believe. Some people find it very easy to criticize, but they would be the first to yell if asked to pay a little bit in the way of taxes to provide a right kind of police force for the city.

UNITED IN MARRIAGE SATURDAY.

Saturday afternoon at the Congregational parsonage Mrs. Gertrue Van Allen and Glen Swayze were united in marriage, Rev. Colburn officiating. They were accompanied by Mrs. Colburn and Miss Murray. Immediately after the service they left for Milan to spend a few days with the groom's parents.

THE MARTHA WASHINGTON THEATRE FIRST

The Martha Washington is the first theatre in Michigan to show the famous Max Sennett picture, "Molly O." It will come to this picture house next Sunday, Jan. 8, and will run for four days. It is said to be the big hit of the screen. Mrs. Signor is to be congratulated in being the first to show this picture and no doubt lovers of good pictures will appreciate her efforts to give Ypsilanti the first and best of pictures.

POULTRY AND PET STOCK SHOW 9-14

The Washtenaw poultry and pet stock show will be held in the Hertler building on South Ashley street from Jan. 9 to 14. Osler of the farm bureau. A special two days' school will be held under the direction of the state department of poultry husbandry. Special prizes will be given away each night.

Those who have the show in charge are confident that this year will eclipse all previous years. A large number of entries from towns and cities in the state and outside the state are coming in.

MUST FACE THE COURT IN FLETCHER'S DEATH

George Rogoch, the Ann Arbor man who was arrested for furnishing the liquor that it is said was responsible for young Raymond Fletcher's death in that city New Year's morning, will have to face The charge asked was $3 per quart. March term of the circuit court.

According to Prosecuting Attorney Fahrner, Rogoch made the transfer of the liquor at the house of a man by the name of John Voules, which the boys paid $6 for. The charge asked was $6 per quart.

The five boys, Elmer Hesselschwerdt, Anson Rudd, Leo Stieter, Wm. Walsh and Bernard Burns, who were with young Fletcher, are also held by the court on the charge of furnishing and giving away liquor.

FRANK P. GLAZIER DIES NEW YEAR DAY

Frank P. Glazier, former state treasurer, died at his summer home at Cavanaugh Lake New Year's eve. Funeral services were held Wednesday from the late home and the remains were taken to Chelsea for burial.

A few years ago Mr. Glazier was one of the most prominent men in this part of the state. He built beautiful business blocks, both in Chelsea and Ann Arbor, which will stand as a monument to his memory.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE AT WUERTH THEATRE

Mark Twain's masterpiece, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," has been made into a motion picture by William Fox on a scale worthy of the subject. Issued as a special production, it will open an engagement at the Wuerth theatre, Ypsilanti.

Known to the multitude of Mark Twain lovers as "The Yankee," this story is regarded not only as a great classic of American humor, but also as a forceful satire directed against those who sigh for the "good old times." Mark Twain set out to show that the world we live in is the best of all possible worlds, and the time we live in is the best of all possible times.

This he did by taking a typical young American, bright as a new penny, filled with smart, up-to-date ideas, and setting him down in a medieval court, where he could judge for himself whether the knights of old were more courageous than the men of today, and whether life as a whole was more comfortable then than now.

The result is exquisite fantasy and delicious fooling, with a sharply drawn conclusion. "The Yankee" is rated high among Mark Twain's books. Certainly it is one of the funniest.

The picture was directed by Emmett J. Flynn, noted for his skill in fidelity and detail. The Yankee is played by Harry C. Myers, a well-known light comedian.

N. B. Young, of Oscoda, and daughter, Miss Edna Young, who teaches at Otisville, have returned after visiting Mrs. Dick Elliott over the holidays.

Christopher Stockdale is on the sick list.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hilleker, of Farmington, were New Year's guests of Thomas Hughes and wife.

YOUNG BOY PAYS LIFE FOR DRINK

NEW YEAR'S CELEBRATION ENDS FATALLY FOR ANN ARBOR LAD.

Raymond Fletcher, the 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Fletcher, of Ann Arbor, was found dead New Year's morning in the Fletcher car in front of his home. New Year's eve young Fletcher, in company with Anson Rudd, Bernard Burns and two other young men of Ann Arbor, drove over to Ypsilanti to celebrate New Year's eve.

The story told by those who were with Fletcher was that they had had a little celebration in Ypsilanti, and after the new year was ushered in they started for home. When they reached the down town district in Ann Arbor two of the boys left the party, the rest going with Fletcher to his home. In a statement made to the prosecuting attorney they said that when they reached the Fletcher home Raymond did not want to get out of the car and go into the house, for his parents would see him in an intoxicated condition, and that he asked them to go and leave him, saying that he would soon sober up and then he would go into the house.

In the morning when the father looked out of the window he saw the car standing out in front of the house and called to the boys to go out and put it into the garage. It was then discovered that Raymond had not slept in his bed and a search was made for him. On going to the automobile the body was found in the bottom of the car, where it had fallen from the rear seat.

Coroner Ganzhorn, of Ann Arbor, took charge of the case and ordered an autopsy performed, and over a pint of moonshine whisky was found in the boy's stomach, and according to the physician performing the autopsy, death was due to acute alcoholism.

Monday night George Rogoch, of Ann Arbor, was arrested, charged with furnishing the liquor which is claimed caused young Fletcher's death.

At one time the Fletchers were residents of Ypsilanti and Mr. Fletcher was engaged in the sale of soft drinks on South Prospect street. They moved from here to Ann Arbor about four years ago.

A private funeral was held Wednesday from the home. He is survived by his father and mother, a sister, Frieda, and four brothers, William, Addison, Glenn and Floyd.

In Detroit, Toledo and Ann Arbor it is said that there were 27 deaths New Year's due to the same cause that took young Raymond's life. Isn't it time that there was some drastic measure taken to deal with these fiends in human form that will make and sell this poison? We are of the opinion that if a few examples were made there would be less of it going on.

HOSPITAL SUPERINTENDENT RESIGNS.

It is rumored that Miss Day, superintendent of Beyer hospital, and the hospital board have resigned For some time there have been rumors that certain city officials were not exactly pleased with the earnings of this institution and it was finally decided to cut the superintendent's salary. What the outcome will be the future will tell. There is no question but that Ypsilanti needs a hospital and must expect to make up when there are deficiencies. Miss Day has made an excellent superintendent and in the judgment of those who are familiar with the situation it is a shame that Ypsilanti will have to lose her.

FORMER RESIDENT PASSES AWAY IN CHICAGO.

Word was received here of the death of Mrs. Van Tuyl, who was a resident of this city before going to live with her son, Dr. Harry Van Tuyl, of Chicago, at whose home she died. The body will be brought to Ypsilanti for burial.

POULTRY CULLING DEMMONSTRATIONS

During the past two weeks the county agent has held 15 poultry culling demonstrations in Scio, Ann Arbor, Saline, York, Ypsilanti, Salem townships. As soon as the present list of applications are taken care of no new culling demonstrations will be scheduled. This work will again be started the first week in July and emphasized during the summer and fall. Late winter and early spring is a poor time to cull poultry.

The farmers of Dixboro community have arranged for a series of community meetings to be held each month. On Dec. 14 Prof. H. E. Dennison, of M. A. C., gave an interesting talk on the improvement and management of the dairy herd. Their next meeting is scheduled for Jan. 18. A pot luck dinner at noon and Prof. W. C. Cribbs, of M. A. C., will address the meeting on Farmer Co-operative Marketing.

Sharon township farmers have also planned a series of monthly community meetings. The second one of these will be held the 19th of January, at which time Dr. Perry will address the meeting. They are planning on having some moving pictures for part of the program.

Plans are under way for the organization of a cow testing association in the northeastern part of the county in the near future. Twenty-six herds are necessary before such an organization can be completed.

Plans for the annual poultry show and school have been completed and at present prospects indicate a large show. Five hundred and fifty coops are available and as soon as these are filled by the entries no additional entries will be taken. The school of instruction will be held Thursday and Friday afternoon and evening. Prof. E. C. Foreman, of M. A. C., will give the lectures.

The county agent is interested in receiving the names of a few farmers who would be interested in growing some Hardigan alfalfa, which is a new strain developed by the Michigan experiment station. It is desired that this be grown in rows and cultivated. It will be grown for the production of seed.

Farmers' meeting for the next two weeks: Ypsilanti grange, Jan. 7; annual poultry show, Jan. 9-14; annual poultry school, Jan. 12-13; Ann Arbor Farmers' club, Jan. 11; annual meeting of Washtenaw County Co-operative association, Jan. 12; Saline Farmers' club, Jan. 14; Dixboro community meeting, meeting, Jan. 18; Sharon township community meeting, Jan. 19; Saline Live Stock Shipping association, Jan. 19.

The Farm bureau seed department is advising that there is likely to be a shortage of good clover seed this spring and that farmers can expect an advance in price over the present quotation. They advise the early buying of seed if first-class seed is desired.

Due to advances in the live stock markets a number of farmers have lost money by not shipping their stock through the co-operative shipping associations. Farmers are advised to keep in close touch with the managers of their co-ops. Sometimes the prices advance rapidly and the manager is usually in close touch with these changes.

The supply of farm bureau virgin wool overcoats manufactured for the Michigan State Farm bureau is practically exhausted. They still have a complete line of suitings, blankets and auto robes.

Michigan fruit growers' organization has taken steps to become affiliated with the Michigan State Farm bureau.

Farm bureau officers in the counties surrounding Detroit are planning to organize a farm produce exchange, which will be a co-operative organization to handle vegetables, fruit, butter and poultry. The final organization meeting will be held Jan. 21 at the Fort Shelby hotel, Detroit.

The American Farm Bureau federation presented the bulk of the economic testimony before the interstate commerce commission in asking for the reduction of freight rates. There was a general 10 per cent reduction which became effective Dec. 27. This reduction covers basic farm product throughout the entire country.

Through the efforts of the American Farm Bureau federation and others there has been made available $600,000 for the radication of tuberculosis of cattle.

Vermont recently held their annual farm bureau meeting and reports that all counties in the stat with the exception of two are organized and that each county has an average of 650 paid up $10 subscriptions

The last census shows that one farm in every ten throughout the United States markets or purchases part or all of its produce through co-operative marketing agents. Seven and one-quarter million pounds of live stock were marketed through the co-operative shipping associations last year in Washtenaw county.

Texas Agricultural college is including a course on farm organization in their four-year course in agriculture. The history and development of the grand and farm bureau federation will be studied.

Membership in the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., at present is estimated around 35,000.

Iowa State Farm bureau recently put on a one-day membership drive which resulted in the addition of from 3,500 to 4,000 new members. One county reports 1,083 farms and 1,115 farm bureau members.

A. L. Bibbins, former secretary of the Crops Improvement association, has been employed by the New York State Farm Bureau federation to take charge of their seed department.

American Farm Bureau federation has asked for the reason of the term "No export demand," used by grain brokers when visible supply of grain is abnormally small. More wheat has been exported this year than ever before.

Senator Capper still remains the farmers' friend and just recently in the halls of congress he vigorously defended the "Farm Bloc" against its eastern critics.

The farm bureau is back of the "truth in fabric" legislation and will use every effort to have the bill passed in congress. Every member should urge his congressman to support this bill. It will do more to increase the price of wool than anything else at the present time.

The department of transportation has secured a reduction in railroad valution of $1,700,000,000, an annual saving of $30 for every farmer in the United States. In the grain case the farm bureau presented more evidence than any other intervenes. If the 25 per cent reduction asked by the farm bureau is granted it will mean a saving of $63,000,000 a year in freight bills for the farmers of America.

Seemed Only Explanation.

Wilbur had seen the various peddlers come through the alley with horses and wagons pulling their wares. So when the scissors grinder appeared one day carrying the bulky machine on his back there seemed to be but one explanation possible to the lad. When the man came near enough Wilbur asked sympathetically: "Mister, is your horse dead?"

Removing Mildew.

Chloride of lime, used intelligently, will remove mildew. Do not use too much. A teaspoonful to a small tub or pail full of water is plenty. Be sure lime is thoroughly dissolved, or better still, tie it up in a stout piece of cloth and run water onto it, pressing the cloth with a stick; then allow it to float in tub. Immerse article to be cleansed and allow to stand several hours. Remove and rinse thoroughly in several waters. Repeat if necessary, but do not increase quantity of lime, as it will eat the material.

Beware that the same cheating doesn't occur to you when buying pipe for a plumbing job. Exceptional cheapness in price means some sort of "a nigger in the wood pile." A song service by the company was first. Howard Moore was "introduced" by the pastor in a humorous manner and gave a short talk, then read the story of "The Prodigal Father." The lesson drawn was that our prayers are for the things we are most interested in and very often we miss the great blessings our Heavenly Father has for us because we are not willing to let Him lead us. Clyde Breining sang a solo and Mrs. Howard Moore and Miss Marjorie Moore a duet. Katherine Schneider and Richard Schneider recited. The church altar was still decorated as for the Christmas exercises and the dining room decorations were in red and green. No trace has been found of them yet. They were young men.

Preaching by Rev. Brewer every Sunday at 10 o'clock. All are welcome.

Success Follows Perseverance.

Success may not come in a day. It may not come in a week, a month or a year. It never does come in a day, a week or a month, or a year. But soon or late it is bound to come, and with gratifying fullness, if confidence is sustained despite all reverses, if effort is manfully maintained. Whoever follows this rule of faithful perseverance must in the end find a place among life's winners. For with repeated effort power grows. And power thus augmented proves irresistible at last. —H. Obituary

Mrs. R. A. Wells

Tuesday the earthly habitation of a great souled woman was laid to rest in Highland cemetery. Mrs. R. A. Wells had lived among us but a little over a year, coming in the autumn of 1920 with her husband, who had just become associate professor in the department of mathematics in the Normal college. Reared in a home where prayer was "the native air," educated in a college dominated by Christian ideals, with nearly a score of years of life as a wife, home maker and worker in communities devoted to the training of young people for lives of Christian service, Mrs. Wells at once became an active leader in the Christian enterprises of our town. The family church certificate followed close behind the household furniture; the Women's Misisonary society felt the impetus of her zeal at once. A semi-invalid, under the strictest regimen of diet, her interest and labors in the Aid society were those of a woman of vigorou physique. In her tender care for the little parish girls in her Sunday school class, she showed the heart of a true shepherdess of souls. She was a competent and consecrated Christian worker. But her home was her kingdom. There she reigned as a true queen, with the sceptre of love. Her children were the objects of her tender solicitude, watchful care and earnest prayers. She taught them of their heavenly father, and by her genuine, earnest faith and life led them in the way of Christ. Her husband found, in her splendid womanliness, strength for the days' tasks and inspiration for better and broader helpfulness. And into this kingdom of her home her husband's students, for whom she, too, felt a shepherding responsibility and affection, were invited for a homey meal or a social chat. It is said that the mother of a great Canadian preacher and novelist, who was herself the wife of a home missionary, used to ride on horseback from home to home and meeting to meeting, sharing in her husband's labors, and as she rode she often held in her arms her little bairn whom she must train to take up the work when the parents' strength should fail. So this great-souled woman who has tarried in our midst for a few months has held in her heart the interests of home, community, nation and world. But her citizenship here was but temporary. She has gone on to dwell in the kingdom of the heavenly-minded, among the spirits of those made perfect in love and goodness.

Two Could Play That Game.

A hundred years ago a wealthy bachelor, named Paige, who lived near Albion, R. I., gave a party; one of the young ladies left a glove. Mr. Paige returned it with the following note: "If from your glove you take the letter G, that glove is love and that I have for thee." The young lady replied: "If from your name you take the letter P, that Paige is age and that won't do for me." The story is vouched for by a friend of the Outlook, whose grandmother had it at first hand.—The Outlook.

Stories of Great Scouts

By Elmo Scott Watson

©, Western Newspaper Union.

SACAGAWEA, "THE BIRD WOMAN" SCOUT

In the Portland (Ore.) city park stands the statue of an Indian woman. A little baby is strapped on her back and her hand is outstretched to the west, toward the Pacific ocean. The statue is that of Sacagawea, "The Bird Woman," the sixteen-year-old girl scout and guide who led Lewis and Clark over the "Shining Mountains" to the "Everywhere-Salt-Water" toward which her hand points.

When Lewis and Clark visited the Hidatsa Indians in North Dakota on their great exploring trip west, they found a Shoshone girl living with that tribe. At the age of five she had been captured from her people by a Hidatsa war party. When she was fourteen years old, Toussaint Charbanneau, a French-Canadian trapper, won her from her captor in a game of "hide-the-bone" and married her the next year.

The Bird Woman wished to return to her people and Lewis and Clark engaged Charbonneau and his wife as interpreters to the Indians they would meet. During the winter of 1805 Sacagawea gave birth to a son, whom she called Baptiste, and this tiny papoose went with his dauntless mother through all the hardships which the explorers afterward endured. He was strapped on Sacagawea's back one day when the clumsy Charbanneau upset one of the boats containing the precious instruments and records of the party. The Bird Woman at once sprang overboard into the muddy stream and rescued them.

More than once Sacagawea proved her value to the explorers. Far up the river when the forest and snow baffled her companions and they were lost, the homing instinct of the Indian girl led her on and she guided them safely to her people. The chief who welcomed them proved to be Sacagawea's brother, who was overjoyed to see his lost sister again. He sold the white men much-needed horses—and would have stolen them back, had not the Bird Woman betrayed the plot to Captain Lewis.

Sacagawea remained with Lewis and Clark until they reached the Pacific. On their return journey she stopped with her people, the Shoshones, and there she spent the remainder of her days. She died on the Wind River reservation in Wyoming April 9, 1894, almost a hundred years of age.

"VAMPS" WHO MADE HISTORY

By JAMES C. YOUNG.

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE GIRL WHO WON AND RULED A KING.

WE HEAR a great deal today about the iniquitous vampire. It is one of the curious sidelights of history that the vampire has helped to shape the destinies of the greatest men and empires. And certainly none of the famous women who might answer to that description had a stranger beginning than a little girl born at Paris in 1721. Her supposed father was Francois Poisson, an officer in the household of the Duke of Orleans. But common report held that her real father was a great financier of the time, who undertook to direct the girl's education. It is said that in her early youth he recognized in her a spark of genius and shaped the girl's education so that some day she might be the king's mistress.

At the age of twenty this girl was married to a nephew of her protector and became the belle of the wealthiest circles in Paris business life. But that was a long way from the court, which she never entered until chance threw her in the way of Louis XV, at a public ball. He was captivated and not long afterward the young bride cast aside her husband for a doubtful position at Versailles. Louis bought her an estate and from this she took the name by which she became famous—the Duchess de Pompadour.

Pompadour was a woman of undoubted genius. She paid court to the literary leaders of her time, notably Voltaire, and soon became a power in the realm. This power she extended by every possible means, corresponding regularly with generals in the field, dabbling in affairs of state, and finally becoming the uncrowned queen of France.

For years French policy had been to oppose Austria by alliances with the German states. Because Frederick the Great wrote scurrilous verses about Pompadour she swore to be avenged, and when Maria Theresa of Austria wrote her a friendly letter, she upset France's national policy overnight, forming an alliance with Austria. This brought on the disastrous Seven Year's war and indirectly prepared France for the troubles which ended in the Revolution.

Pompadour did not live to see the working out of her statecraft.

When a fateful illness overtook her, at the age of forty-two, she calmly heard the doctor's sentence, had herself dressed in court costume, and bravely lay down to meet her fate.

CHAPTER X.

The Deep-Wells.

The next morning I turned out at break of day, before anybody else was up, slipped into my clothes, straightened up my bunk, and dropped through the ladder hatchway to the main-deck.

I had told myself that the reason for the daybreak turn-out was a desire to see if the railroad people really had been sufficiently in earnest about the proposed copper mine branch to make a survey for it; but the true underlying push was a biting reluctance to have anything more to do with Bullerton, or even to sit at table with him.

Tiptoeing through the common room, so as not to wake Daddy Hiram, I broke into Jeanie's kitchen and raided the cupboard for a bite of something to eat. There was plenty of bread, and some cold fried ham, and cutting a couple of generous sandwiches, I hiked out to make my breakfast in the open.

The sandwiches disposed of, I began to quarter the bench woodland back and forth, searching for some indications of the railroad survey. In due time I found one of the location stakes, and from its facing and the markings on it, got the direction of the proposed line and was able to trace it for some distance along the bench. As Daddy had said, it ran within a few hundred yards of the Cinnabar claim, and a short sidetrack would make his suggestion perfectly feasible; our ore could be shot into the cars with but a single handling.

From tracing the railroad survey, I edged around to take another look at the possibilities of the drainage tunnel Daddy and I had figured on. Going over the ground this second time, and with some better knowledge of the difficulties, it appeared that we must have ridiculously underestimated the probable cost. Pacing the distances carefully, and guessing at the differences in altitude by the heights of the trees, I saw that it wouldn't be safe to count upon less than a mile of tunneling, and this, in the solid porphyry of Old Cinnabar, and in a situation remote from the nearest base of supplies, would run—no, it wouldn't run; it would fairly gallop into money.

Was this what Bullerton meant to do if he could oust me? That he was utterly confident of his ability to drain the Cinnabar was evident. But how was it to be done? Would he, or his backers, be willing to spend a quarter of a million or more, and the better part of a year's time, driving that mile-long tunnel?

The longer I thought about it, the larger the conviction grew that no such expensive expedient was to be resorted to. Bullerton, or his backers, or both, knew some other and far cheaper and more expeditious way of getting rid of the water. Sitting on a big rock that had in some former earth convulsion tumbled from the broken cliffs above the mine, I gave the mechanical fraction of my brain (it was a small fraction and sadly under-developed) free rein.

Two possibilities suggested themselves. A siphon, a big pipe, starting at the bottom of the shaft and leading out over the top and down the mountain to a point lower than the shaft bottom, would, after it was once started, automatically discharge a stream of its own bigness, whatever that should be. But the cost of over a mile of such pipe was beyond my means; and if two six-inch pumps driven night and day had failed to make any impression upon the flood, what could be expected of a siphon which, in the nature of things, couldn't be much bigger than an ordinary street water main?

The other possibility was even less hopeful. It was the driving of a short tunnel, which Daddy and I might undertake without additional help, from the level of the high bench straight in to an intersection with the mine shaft. This, I estimated, might tap the water at a point possibly twenty feet below its present level in the shaft. Its success, as I saw at once, would depend entirely upon the location and volume of the underground lake which was supposed to be supplying the flood. If this reservoir were shallow and high in the mountain, the short tunnel might drain it. If it were deep and low, nothing would be accomplished.

The question was still hanging hopelessly up in the air when I made my way around to the mine buildings by the left-hand gulch path, sneaked in and began to shuck myself into Daddy's extra pair of overalls; just for what, I hadn't the least idea; only I needed to be doing something to keep me from going completely dotty in the guessing contest.

By this time, as I knew, they would be getting up from breakfast in the cabin across the dump head, which would most likely be Bullerton's cue to come over and ride me some more. When I looked out in sour anticipation, here he came, smoking one of his high-priced cigars and swaggering a bit, as he always did in walking.

"This is your thirty-thousand-dollar day, Broughton," he tossed at me as soon as he stepped over the threshold of the shaft house door; but I fancied I could notice that, some way, he didn't seem quite so chipper and careless as he had the day before.

"See here," I ripped out; "what's the use? You can't buy this mine at any price! It's not in the market and it isn't going to be. Not in a thousand years!"

"But see here; what's the use of butting your head against a stone wall? You're stuck, world without end, and you know it. This flooded hole in the ground is of no more use to you than a pair of spectacles to a blind man!"

"Perhaps not; 'tis a poor thing, but mine own. I guess I can keep it as a souvenir if I feel like it, can't I?"

"Oh, h—l!" he gritted, and turning on his heel went away.

After he had gone I patted myself on the back a bit for not losing my temper and then, just to have an excuse for staying away from the cabin and the Bullerton vicinity, I made fires under the boilers and got up steam. In the former pumping spasm Daddy and I had operated only the two big centrifugals, ignoring the deep-well pumps designed to lift the water from the lower levels of the mine.

Just to try something that we hadn't tried before, I got steam on the deep wellers, and soon found that the machinery, which we hadn't taken down in the general overhauling, needed tinkering before it would be safe to run it. Banking the boiler fires, I went at the job single-handed and managed to wear out the livelong day at it.

It took me all the afternoon and then some to get the machinery cleaned and tinkered up and reassembled. In pawing over the supplies in the mine storeroom—stuff left by the former operators—we had found an acetylene flare torch and a can of carbide and I rigged the torch so that I could go on working after dark.

It was along about nine o'clock when I got the deep-wells ready to run and freshened up the fires and turned the steam on. In curious contrast to the care which had been taken to provide a discharge outlet for the centrifugals, the Cornish pumps had merely an iron trough which ran to a ditch leading down to the bench below the mine buildings. After a few minutes of the clanking and banging, the water began to come. It was horribly smelling stuff, thick and discolored; evidences sufficient that it was coming from the bottom of the mine. The two pumps together were lifting about an eight-inch stream, and it occurred to me at once that if I could set the centrifugals going at the same time, the mass attack might accomplish what the piece-meal assault couldn't.

Throwing in the clutch that drove the big rotaries, I ran up against what Daddy would have called a "circumstance." There wasn't power enough to drive both sets of pumps coupled in together; at least, not with the steam pressure the boilers were carrying. Thinking to get more power by pushing the fires a bit harder, I went to the detached boiler room to stoke up, leaving the deep wells clanging away in the shafthouse. I had fired two of the furnaces and was at work on the third when a series of grinding crashes in the machinery sent me flying to find out what was going wrong.

What was happening—what had already happened—was a plenty. As I have said, the great Cornish water-lifters were driven through a train of gearing. When I reached the scene, the steam engine was still running smoothly, but the pumps had stopped. The reason didn't have to be looked for with a microscope. The gear-train was a wreck, with one of the wheels smashed into bits, and half of the cogs stripped from its mesh-mate, if that's what you'd call it.

Mechanically I stopped the engine and went to view the remains. The deep-wells were done for—there was no question about that; they'd never run again until a new set of gears should be installed. That much determined, I began to look for the cause of the calamity. Naturally, I supposed that a cracked cog in one of the wheels had given way, and with this for a starter, the general smash would follow as a matter of course. But a careful and even painful scrutiny of the wreckage failed to reveal the cog with the ancient fracture. Each break was new and fresh and clean; there wasn't a sign of an old flaw in any one of them.

I think I must have knelt there under the gear train for a half-hour or more, handling the fragments of iron and fitting them together. It was like a child's broken-block puzzle, and after a time I was able to lay all the larger bits out upon the floor in their proper relation to one another. It was in the ground-up debris remaining that I found something which suddenly made me see red. Battered into shapelessness, but still clearly recognizable, were the crushed disjecta membra of our twelve-inch monkey-wrench!

I tried not to go off the handle in a fit of mad rage. With a sort of forced calm I considered every beam and projecting timber where I might incautiously have left the wrench, and from which it might have jarred off to fall into the gears. There was no such chance. I had used the wrench in reassembling the machinery, but now that I came to recall all the circumstances, I distinctly remembered having put it, together with the other tools, on the little work bench back of the engine. The alternative conclusion was, therefore, fairly inevitable. While I was firing the furnaces, somebody—and doubtless somebody who had been watching for the opportunity—had taken advantage of the moment when my back was turned and had thrown the wrench into the gears.

It was the final straw. There was only one person on the Cinnabar reservation who could have any motive for wrecking my machinery; and while I was banking the fires and setting things in order for the night, I charted my course, as the navigators say. The dawn of another day, I told myself, would schedule the ultimate limit. Unless he should prove to be a good bit quicker with his gun than I was with my fists, Bullerton was due to get the man-handling he seemed to be aching for; and beyond that, he'd quit the Cinnabar, if I should have to tie him on his horse and flog the beast half-way to Atropia.

It was with this most unchristian design seething and boiling in my brain that I finally went over to the cabin, let myself in, and climbed stealthily up the roll ladder to my blankets, and the next thing I knew, it was broad daylight, the sun was shining in at the little window over the head of my bunk, and from the kitchen at the rear a juicy and most appetizing odor of frying ham was wafting itself up through the cracks in the unchinked walls of my cubicle.

CHAPTER XI.

An Arctic Bath.

It's an old saying that coming events have a knack of foreshadowing themselves. While I was struggling into my clothes and reviving that overnight determination to have it out with Bullerton the minute I should lay eyes upon him, it struck me all at once that the house was curiously quiet. To be sure, somebody was stirring and the breakfast was cooking, but the premonition that something had happened was strong upon me when I descended the ladder.

In the living room I found a mighty sober-faced old Daddy putting breakfast on the table.

"It's just you and me for it, this mornin', Stannie," he muttered, laying plates for two; and his mild old eyes looked as if they were about to take a bath.

"What!" I exclaimed. "Has Bullerton gone?"

"Uh-huh; bright and early—'fore day, I reckon; leastwise, I didn't hear him when he went."

"But where's Jeanie? She isn't sick, is she?"

He shook his head dolefully.

"No; she—she's gone, too."

"Not with Bullerton?" I gasped.

"It sure does look that-away, Stannie. She left a li'l' note on the table for me, a-tellin' me not to worry none, and sayin' I needn't look for her till I saw her ag'in."

"No, She's Gone, Too."

At first I could hardly believe my own ears. It was so incredibly out of keeping with Jeanie as I had been idealizing her.

"Are you going after them?" I demanded.

"What for?" was the despondent query. "'Tain't a morsel o' use, any way you look at it. Jeanie's a woman growed, and she don't have to have the old daddy say she can, 'r she mustn't. Besides, they was probably pitchin' out to catch one o' the early trains—there's one each way, east and west—and them trains 've been gone a couple o' hours."

Daddy had done his best with the breakfast, but I don't recall any meal of my life that ever came so near choking me. I told Daddy about the smashing of the machinery, and the proof I had that it had been a piece of sabotage.

"Reckon maybe he allowed you'd find out he done it and try a dogfall 'r somethin' with him to pay him back?" Daddy queried.

"I don't know," I confessed.

I went on eating in silence, or rather trying to eat, and turning over the puzzling and bad-tasting questionings in my mind. How could Jeanie go off with Bullerton, knowing him to be the scamp he was? And why, if she had been meaning all along to do this thing, had she blocked his game by telling me that I wasn't to sell him the Cinnabar?

It was in the midst of these reflections that I chanced to feel in the coat pocket where I had been carrying the deed turned over to me by Daddy Hiram; and for the second time that morning I nearly choked. The pocket was empty!

"What's hit you now, son?" Daddy inquired; seeing my jaw drop, I suppose.
